Glasgow:
Scotland with style[®]

Dear colleagues and friends,

It gives us great pleasure to invite you to the 23rd Annual Meeting of the Society of Environmental Toxicology and Chemistry (SETAC Europe).

The task of protecting the global environment whilst also enabling the innovative use of chemicals and other substances in new technologies, industry or agriculture is a great challenge. For SETAC, this is a challenge we relish, and bringing experts together who are engaged in finding and developing innovative solutions to environmental issues is ever more important in the current economic climate. In true SETAC fashion, this major international conference brings together experts from government, business and academia to meet this challenge. The conference will showcase cutting edge, high quality science that informs environmental risk assessments as well as the development of policy – and in the end, on how we should all look after our planet.

We warmly welcome you to Glasgow, one of the UK's most vibrant cities, and a former European City of Culture. Glasgow has some spectacular natural heritage close-by including the highlands of Scotland, a long maritime history with marine conservation areas along the beautiful estuary.

You can be assured of warm hospitality, great social events and a fantastic scientific programme at the UK's premier conference centre. Welcome to Scotland!
