

An evaluation of the capacitive behavior of supercapacitors as a function of the radius of cations using simulations with a constant potential method

Antenor J. Paulista Neto¹, Débora A. C. da Silva¹, Hudson G. Zanin^{1*}, Vanessa A. Gonçalves², Renato G. Freitas^{2*} and Eudes E. Fileti^{3*}

¹Advanced Energy Storage Division, Center for Innovation on New Energies, Carbon Sci-Tech Labs, School of Electrical and Computer Engineering, University of Campinas; Av. Albert Einstein 400, Campinas - SP 13083-852, Brazil.

²Institute of Physics & Department of Chemistry, Laboratory of Computational Materials, Federal University of Mato Grosso, 78060-900, Cuiabá - MT, Brazil.

³Institute of Science and Technology of the Federal University of São Paulo, 12247-014, São José dos Campos - SP, Brazil.

Supplementary Information

*Corresponding Authors: fileti@gmail.com, rgfreitas@ufmt.br, hzanin@unicamp.br

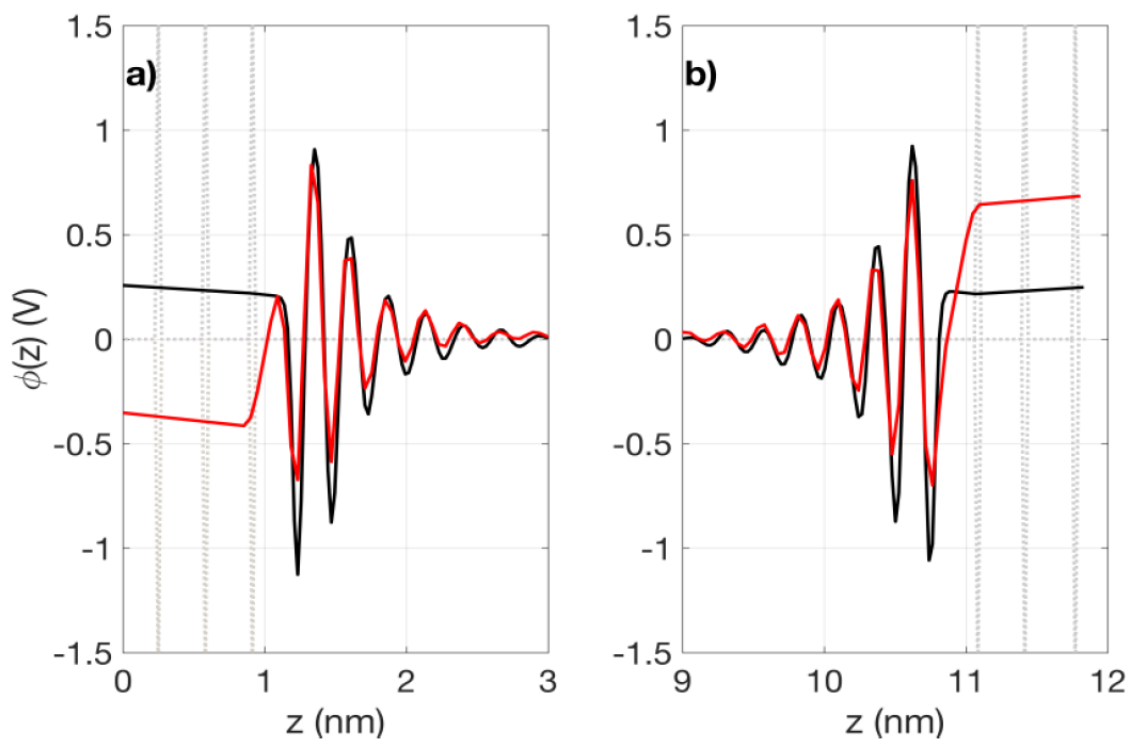

Figure S1 - Electrostatic potential profile (V), in two different applied potentials (0 and 1.2 V) for Li_2SO_4 as a function of electrodes distance, z (nm).